

Eating Disorders

Eating disorders are psychiatric disorders characterized by a disturbed body image and a morbid fear of obesity. These disorders are manifested by abnormal patterns of food consumption and self-induced marked weight loss.

Anorexia Nervosa is a morbid preoccupation to lose weight, which does not disappear even with significant weight loss to the point of starvation. It affects approximately 1% of adolescent girls and tends to occur early in adolescence following an earlier period of real or perceived obesity. Other psychiatric disorders may be present such as obsessive-compulsion disorder, anxiety, or depression. Symptoms include: loss of menses, cold intolerance, constipation and hyperactivity. Excess mortality is from cardiovascular death (which can occur years later), malnutrition, and suicide.

Bulimia Nervosa differs in that there is consumption of large quantities of food followed by an extreme need to then purge oneself of that food. It affects 1-5% of adolescent girls and tends to occur later in adolescence. Many have additional psychiatric disorders such as depression, substance abuse, and anti-social behavior. Build may be normal, underweight, or overweight. Excess mortality is low but due to cardiovascular death or rare esophageal tear.

Underwriting considerations:

Medical examinations with special attention to current build and/or recent APS records are required in the second and third years from recovery to document weight stability. Denial, false body image, and relapse are so prevalent.

Rating if not associated with other psychiatric disorders or substance abuse:

Present or within 1st year of recovery	Decline
Maintaining normal weight:
2nd year from recovery	Table C
3rd - 4th year	Table B
After 4 years	No rating
